NB PEP Investments Limited

July 23, 2009

Dear Investor:

We are providing the enclosed information with respect to your investment in the class A shares of NB PEP Investments Limited ("NBPEPI").

NBPEPI is a PFIC for U.S. federal income tax purposes. Accordingly, a U.S. investor in NBPEPI is considered a U.S. shareholder in a PFIC. A U.S. shareholder is subject to the rules contained in Sections 1291 through 1297 of the Internal Revenue Code. A U.S. shareholder may elect to treat the arrangement as a "qualified electing fund" or QEF pursuant to Section 1295(b) with respect to the shareholder's ownership interest in the PFIC. Once a QEF election is made, the election applies to all subsequent tax years.

Should a shareholder follow appropriate procedures and make a QEF election, the shareholder is taxed on the shareholder's proportionate share of earnings computed under U.S. tax principles for each year in which the fund is a PFIC. An electing U.S. shareholder reports the share of earnings from the PFIC by filing IRS Form 8621, Return by a Shareholder of a Passive Foreign Investment Company or Qualified Electing Fund.

NBPEPI indirectly owns interests in other PFICs ("Subsidiary PFICs"). We received a Private Letter Ruling from the IRS under which U.S. shareholders in NBPEPI who make: (i) either a mark-to-market election or a QEF election with respect to NB Private Equity Partners Limited ("NBPE"); and (ii) a QEF election with respect to NBPEPI may treat the Subsidiary PFICs as QEFs (see PLR 200838003). In the event a U.S. shareholder does not make such elections with respect to both NBPE and NBPEPI, such shareholder may be subject to the excess distribution rules under Section 1291 with respect to their indirect interests in the Subsidiary PFICs.

The amounts reflected on the enclosed PFIC Annual Information Statement represent the shareholder's share of NBPEPI's ordinary earnings and net capital gain income for the tax year. As a shareholder, if a QEF election is effective, you should pick up your pro rata share of NBPEPI's income for the number of days during the year that you held the investment.

A shareholder who has made a QEF election may elect to defer paying the tax on the undistributed income of the PFIC, if any, on Form 8621. If this election is made under Section 1294 of the Code, the shareholder will be subject to an interest charge on the deferred tax.

Ordinary earnings from NBPEPI are not "qualified dividends," and thus are not eligible for the reduced rate of tax provided by the 2003 Jobs and Growth Reconciliation Tax Act.

A U.S. shareholder who received distributions during the fiscal year may receive IRS Form 1099-DIV from the trustee or paying agent stating the cash payment. A shareholder who has made a QEF election should be sure to avoid double-counting earnings from this investment.

Is it suggested that the shareholders consult with their tax advisors and the offering documents to determine whether to make a QEF election with respect to the ownership interest in NBPEPI.

Sincerely,

NB PEP Investments Limited
